WHISTLE BLOWERS

Whistle Blowers today, remains a privately owned and totally independent entity, operating throughout Africa and reporting to clients based in Sweden, Switzerland, the United Kingdom, Australia, New Zealand, Ireland and India, and has call centres in both South Africa and India.

We all continually read about fraud, ethics and dishonesty in our respective work environments; the media publicises enough of it.

The question that is least answered is, "What are we doing to stop it?"

The King III report recommends that corporate governance should emanate from an ethical foundation and the new Companies Act (2008) clearly stipulates that "a public company and state owned company must establish... a system to receive disclosures ... confidentially and act on them..."

An interesting statistic is that "ethics" is mentioned over 1000 times in the King III report.

One wonders if there is an institution, organisation, business, government department in the country that can consider itself immune from threats of fraud, extortion, corruption, abuse of power, conflict of interest, abuse of privileged information, favouritism, nepotism and any other unethical behaviour.

"The only thing necessary for the triumph of evil, is for good men to do nothing."

(Edmund Burke)
